Terrell Ogilvie Named New Deputy Fire Chief in Glenpool

July 30, 2014, GLENPOOL, Okla. – Terrell Ogilvie, a veteran Glenpool firefighter, was recently named to the Deputy Fire Chief position in Glenpool. Prior to his promotion, Ogilvie served the past four years as the Lieutenant on A Shift and the Assistant Training Officer for the Glenpool Fire Department. “I am deeply honored and proud to be the new Deputy Chief,” said Ogilvie. “I am very passionate about helping fellow fire fighters achieve their goals, and I am eager to work closely with the Glenpool Fire Department fire fighters to assist them in their continued professional development and in maintaining their already outstanding reputation.”

Ogilvie’s responsibilities as Deputy Chief include emergency response, training coordination, project management, and other administrative functions. He first joined the Glenpool Fire Department as a volunteer fire fighter in 1996 and was later hired as a full-time firefighter in 2001. Prior to joining the department, he worked in the information technology field. Ogilvie is a member of Fire Service Instructors of Oklahoma, a field instructor for OSU Fire Service training, and a former Bureau of Indian Affairs wildland firefighter. Over the past 13 years, he has taught a multitude of fire and officer courses to fire fighters across the state.

“We are pleased with Terrell’s promotion to Deputy Chief,” said Fire Chief Paul Newton. “Terrell worked his way through the ranks, gaining valuable knowledge along the way. He brings a unique set of skills to the position having been heavily involved with IT, training and communications throughout his career.”

Ogilvie graduated from Oklahoma State University earning a Bachelor’s degree in Technical Writing and completed coursework toward a Master’s degree in Human Resource Development.
